

Professor Julia Minson (Harvard Kennedy School) is currently seeking Research Assistants for the Fall 2014 term to join her lab.

The Minson Lab conducts psychological research on judgment and decision-making, groups and teams, negotiations, and social influence using theories and methods from social psychology, organizational behavior, and behavioral decision-making. The lab is currently seeking research assistants to work for pay as well as for course credit.

As a Research Assistant, you will learn how to run experiments in the laboratory as well as online, prepare experimental stimuli, and conduct basic data analysis, all while working closely with other members of the lab team.

If interested, please email Sam Skowronek (sam_skowronek@hks.harvard.edu) with your CV and cover letter.
