

Psychology Research Assistant

Are you interested in research experience in psychology and working directly with veterans to study the impact of service dogs? Check out this new position and apply to join our team. We offer a supportive, interdisciplinary environment with mentorship and hands-on research experience on an NIH-funded clinical trial.

The primary purpose of the position is to conduct data collection for human-animal interaction research, with a specific focus on a nationwide clinical trial of service dogs for military veterans with posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) and their families. Data collection will be conducted remotely, so it will consist of telephone calls, video calls, emails, mailing, and text messages. On-site work is required to compile study packages to send, receive and process samples, and maintain the laboratory environment. The position will be part of an inclusive team environment.
